MARKET REVIEW (3 JUNE 2024 (DATE OF LAUNCH) TO 31 DECEMBER 2024)

During the second half of 2024, the China A-share market, as represented by the China Securities Index ("CSI 300 Index"), exhibited mixed performance amid evolving macroeconomic conditions and policy adjustments. Market sentiment remained cautious due to concerns over economic recovery, geopolitical developments, and the regulatory environment. However, intermittent periods of optimism were fueled by government stimulus measures and policy support aimed at stabilizing growth, particularly in key sectors such as technology, consumer goods, and renewable energy.

Sector performance was varied, with technology and consumer discretionary stocks experiencing volatility due to shifting demand patterns and global supply chain disruptions. The financial sector remained relatively stable, supported by monetary policy easing and credit expansion, while industrials and infrastructure-related stocks benefitted from increased government spending. Market liquidity was influenced by foreign investor participation, which fluctuated in response to global risk sentiment and the U.S. Federal Reserve's (the "Fed") interest rate decisions.

The reference index CSI 300 ended the year with moderate gains, reflecting a balance between economic challenges and policy-driven market support. Valuations remained attractive compared to global peers, drawing selective investor interest despite lingering uncertainties. While trading activity varied across sectors, investor focus was largely on earnings resilience, policy direction, and structural shifts within the Chinese economy.

PORTFOLIO STRUCTURE

Asset allocation

(% of NAV)	31.12.2024
Unquoted fixed income securities	96.44
Cash and other assets	3.73
Liabilities	(0.17)
Total	100.00

MARKET OUTLOOK***

The China A-share market is expected to remain influenced by a combination of domestic policy measures and global economic conditions. Government support for economic stabilization, including fiscal stimulus and targeted monetary easing, will likely provide a foundation for market resilience. Key sectors such as technology, consumer discretionary, and new energy are expected to benefit from structural reforms and investment incentives. However, investor sentiment may remain cautious amid ongoing regulatory shifts, geopolitical uncertainties, and external demand fluctuations.

Market valuations continue to present selective opportunities, particularly in sectors aligned with China's long-term growth agenda. Foreign investor participation will be a key factor, with capital flows influenced by global interest rate trends and risk appetite. While volatility is expected to persist, long-term fundamentals, including consumption-driven growth and innovation-led industries, should provide a supportive backdrop for market performance.

INVESTMENT STRATEGY

The Fund will continue to remain fully invested in the Target Fund with minimal cash kept for liquidity purposes.
